The heat rate of these plants ranges from about 6, 800 BTU kWh to more than 10, 000 BTU kWh. The higher heat rates are for the simple-cycle and steam plants, used largely for peaking. Overall, gas-fired generators typically have lower heat rates than coal-fired plants. Besides the need to estimate the primary energy content of delivered electricity, there is an additional consideration for end-use energy technologies such as SWH. Each unit of natural gas displaced by a SWH unit reduces the amount of required natural gas production by more than 1 unit. Depending on how far upstream natural gas processing is examined, the combined inherent...
