By engaging in preventive actions, individuals attempt to affect the likelihood of developing a health problem, delaying the development of a health problem, or reducing the severity of the health problem when it develops. An investment in preventive care today is expected to change a person's future health trajectory. At first glance, how expected trajectories impact how various preventive actions are viewed by older adults may seem relatively straightforward. Older persons have shorter life expectancies and hence may view the likelihood of benefit differently from younger people. The differences in perceived possible benefits between the age groups would logically lead to differences in how the age groups value preventive services. Organizations like the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF), charged with making recommendations about preventive services, would likely want to consider the values older people place on various preventive activities as part of the process of formulating recommendations. This project was requested by the USPSTF because clinical preventive services are increasing in importance as the U.S. population ages. However, there are challenges in evaluating the evidence for preventive services in older adults and in applying the evidence to developing recommendations specific to older adults; perceived benefits and harms may differ from the general population due to decreasing life expectancy, increasing comorbidities, and competing causes of death in older adults. A specific challenge is determining when the net balance of perceived benefits and harms turns negative; that is, when do the harms begin to outweigh the benefits? One important consideration is how patient values affect the determination of benefits and harms of clinical preventive services. Uncertainty is a critical issue facing patients and...
